Property Description	The chapel was built in the late 16th century and deconsecrated in 1658, to be later reused after a few years. Today, however, the chapel is not being used for liturgical functions. The church is built close to the Xarolla Windmill and a cluster of Late Roman/ Byzantine catacombs. The rectangular plan chapel with a slanting roof is characterized by a square-headed door and a centrally placed bell-cot topped with a cross. The chapel has no windows, except for a small slit window on the central door.
